Essentials of Today's Vacation Outfit

Harmony Must Prevail in Frocks, Trimming and Accompanying Accessories; Smart Parasols and Shoes.

NEW YORK, July 26.—Planning a vacation outfit is not the easiest task in the world. Even man finds it difficult—and if man, with his comparatively simple wardrobe, what of mere entire responsibility, but the cost will be increased proportionately. It is out of consideration for this fact, and not from preference, that 99 out of every 100 women choose to be their own modistes.

Costumes for morning, afternoon and evening must be chosen with consummate care, whether one be debutante on his first socially-established outing, or matron with a distinctive reputation to maintain. The frock of the first illustration will serve every practical woman? If the outfit consisted only of gowns it would not seem so complicated a problem, but in these fastidious days it must include so many accessories, and these must be chosen most carefully and with a keen eye for harmony or contrast. Do you wonder, then, at the quandary in which woman finds herself when this task confronts her? To be seen in a town of limited size, a modiste will assume the sped in khaki-color flannel linen, in shades of tan, blue, or black. The addition of a jacket on Russian or Balkan lines will make the outfit suitable for traveling or for wear on cool days.

With this costume a straw hat of tan or similar shade, simply trimmed with flowers, quill or ribbon, also tan gloves, hose and low shoes, should be worn. If one does not care to observe the tan color scheme throughout, these accessories would be in equally good taste and style in black.

Afternoon Frocks. Very attractive for early afternoon wear is the frock with waist and skirt of different tones. Crepe, with figures and motifs of Cubist or Futurist design, makes an effective waist and petticoat. Such a waist, worn with a skirt of similar fabric, and of shade harmonizing with the main tone of the bodice, is both smart and attractive.

The preference in shoes for afternoon and evening wear is given to white canvas, buckskin, kid and satin. For afternoon, they may be either high-button, or low pump with tailored bow. For street wear, the colonial shoe, with buckle of cut steel or gunmetal, is a prime favorite. For evening, either white or black is good style. Black pumps of kid or satin are ornamented with rhinestones or jeweled heels, too, are frequently seen. Stockings as an item of dress have reached a place of vast importance. The approved mode is to have hose of a shade similar to the frock or the color scheme which is seen above them, regardless of the color of the shoes worn. They should, of course, be of silk or net, and may be as elaborate and gossamer as desired or as the purse will permit. For general wear, however, in mere tracery, or in great floral motifs, is traced. Brilliant, gaudy beads and sequins adorn these worn by admirers of the binnacle. Stockings of lace are also in favor with the ultra fashionable.

All-White Hat. The all-white hat, suggesting a coolness especially desirable during mid-summer, predominates for wear with white lingerie frocks. Panama and Milan styles are most numerous. The shapes are considerably larger than formerly, and are simply trimmed; the Panama, with a band of velvet or scarf of ribbon or silk; and the Milan, with ribbon, wings, flowers, tulle or net. The fashion of edging crown and rim with pleatings of tulle and net is much in vogue, as is the hat whose sole claim to a crown consists of a single thickness of black tulle attached to a rim of black straw. Black grosgrain ribbon fashioned in a bow on the left side is its only trimming.

The new parasols are very odd in shape. Many are straight, like those of the Japanese; others drop well over the frame and are almost cup shaped. All are very gaudy in color, but the woman of conservative taste is satisfied if the color harmonizes effectively with her costume. A parasol suitable to carry with lingerie frocks is of white mousseline de soie, trimmed with narrow shirred bands of the material.

Keystone of Outfit. Service both in accessory and gown should be the keynote of the practical woman's outfit. A tub frock that is really washable is something of a rarity in these days of summer lingerie garments, but such a frock is pictured in the second illustration. The envelopment is in ecrú color figured crepe, with sleeves and gulleps of net, and collar and cuffs of corn color crepe silk. A giraffe and tie of the Gobelins blue ribbon finish a costume dainty and smart enough for any afternoon affair during the torrid days of July and August. The vest blouse is illustrated worn over a gullep, but if desired, the sleeves may be attached to the bodice.

The flounce, tier above tier, makes of the maid a charming summer girl, quite type; and one must admit, most attractive. This mode may be introduced in either afternoon or evening frock. When developed in mousseline, net or chiffon, with billowy tails filling in the low cut V bodice front, and with wash of delicate pink, blue or yellow decorating the waist, even green-eyed woman must approve of her ruffled sister.

If the vacation days are to be spent at the seashore, chignons and very perishable fabrics had best be tabooed, as they do not take kindly to the humid atmosphere. Crepe, satins, soft silks and nets are attractive and equally pleasing substitutes. Of negligees and under garments there must, of course, be many.
